

United Nations Alliance of Civilizations

IIIrd UN Alliance of Civilizations Forum
Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, May 27-29, 2010

SUMMARY OF EVENTS ON MAY 27 AND MAY 28¹
AND MAJOR ANNOUNCEMENTS

¹ Summary of events of May 29 will be posted on the RioForum website.

May 27 Events

1. A roundtable was held on Joint Reporting Across Cultures, which featured a report on the first cross-cultural joint reporting exercise of its kind in the Middle East sponsored by the United Nations.
2. A working session on building partnerships for the Online Community on Migration and Integration provided an opportunity for discussion with potential partners from civil society and governments.
3. The forthcoming 'Anna Lindh Report on Euro-Med Intercultural Trends', which received an international recognition at the Rio Forum, is recognized as an essential tool for prioritizing the action of civil society in favour of mutual understanding and for the development of the Alliance of Civilizations Mediterranean Regional Strategy and other regional policies. The active participation of Anna Lindh Foundation in the Forum, including new joint activities in the field of media, expressed the partnership of this institution with the Alliance of Civilizations in the Euro-Mediterranean Region.
4. The InterParliamentary Union convened a meeting of Members of Parliament from around the world to bring the goals of the Alliance of Civilizations closer to legislators and national parliaments.
5. A session on "Addressing Islamophobia: building on unused opportunities for mutual respect and inclusion" generated a lot of interest and attracted a big audience. The various aspects of this complex issue were shared by the participants in the round table who recognized the need to address this challenge.
6. A session on expanding exchanges featured UNAOC focal points/designees from several countries that emphasized exchanges in their national plans. The session called for exchanges to be established as a strategic political priority, especially at the national level. A key recommendation was that the effectiveness of exchanges needs to be demonstrated by ongoing evaluation of programs and their impact that is relevant and actionable for policy-makers. A proposal was made for interested actors to come together in Berlin in October 2010 and have a pre-meeting at the UNAOC's session of focal point countries along with others active in facilitating exchanges.
7. Displaying the important role played by the Alliance's on the audio-visual dimension of intercultural relations, an award winning documentary, BUDRUS, was shown, as well as award-winning videos of the Plural + Youth Festival. The IOM General Director confirmed IOM's continuing support of PLURAL +, the youth video festival on migration, diversity and social cohesion.
8. A Dialogue Café between Rio and Lisbon was inaugurated and generated a lot of interest among students and youngsters who participated in the event.
9. Several organizations whose interests complement those of the Alliance made presentations during the Open Space program.
10. A first meeting of thematic platforms was held. After a general discussion and agreement on the modus operandi, two platforms were established: one on bridging divides in the humanitarian and development area and the second on media literacy. Following a first round of exchanges, positioning papers will be prepared in both cases on time for the Focal points meeting in Berlin this October.
11. UNESCO confirmed their interest in supporting the creation of the UNESCO UNITWIN AoC Chair on Media and Information Literacy for Intercultural Dialogue. The Autonomous University of Barcelona proposed initiating the activities of this network in October 2010.
12. The Focal points meeting discussed and agreed on the Rio Declaration, which was prepared by the host country.
13. At the Focal Points meeting on SouthEast Europe, participants took note of the draft Action Plan implementing the AoC Strategy for South East Europe, prepared by the Secretariat, and stressed the need to finalize it in order to move forward
14. At the Focal Points meeting on the Mediterranean Strategy, participants took stock of the progress made since the last preparatory meeting and agreed on a time line which will lead to the first Regional Conference to be held in Malta at the beginning of November where the Strategy and the Action Plan will be endorsed.

May 28 Thematic Sessions Summary

The thematic sessions were very well-attended. Especially notable was the enthusiastic and large participation of Brazilian young people in the sessions. What follows is a quick recap of the Ministerial meeting and some thematic sessions.

1. At the Ministerial session, Ministers and High Representatives from Governments as well as Heads of International organizations (members of the Group of Friends), expressed renewed support to the Alliance and made suggestions on further improving its effectiveness. They shared information on various national initiatives, including the adoption of National Plans and reports on their implementation. Several partnerships on new projects or ongoing projects of the UNAOC were announced.

2. The thematic session on Democracy, good governance, and cultural diversity emphasized the importance of building trust through dialogue through mechanisms such as inter-religious councils who have a regular and ongoing program of consultations and discussions, which can help to diffuse tension and misperception. It was also pointed out that authorities need to facilitate and promote the effective participation of ethnic and cultural minorities in public life. Political parties have a particular responsibility in ensuring gender equality and the political representation of minorities. Finally, the session called on the need to invest in youth through education for all, offering spaces for youth to express themselves in public life, and facilitate exchanges among youth of different cultural backgrounds. One concrete proposal referred to the establishment of youth political shadow systems, to advise government officials with youth perceptions and suggestions on major political, economic and social issues.
3. The main result of the discussions at the Human Rights Session was that it should be our aim that we experience human rights as our daily culture where everybody has the feeling of belonging to a community with dignity and respect. For this we need 3 Cs: cooperation, communication, and competence; and 3 Is: information, inspiration, and involvement. In conclusion, we need a new social contract and a personal commitment by all of us to pursue human rights in our communities.
4. The Empowering Women through Education session emphasized the transformative power of education, not only for women, but for societies and the world. Recognizing this, some governments have chosen to magnify this transformative power through policies at the national level and through their international aid policies. NGOs representatives emphasized the importance of educating boys and girls, men and women through both formal and informal education. It was also pointed that when cultural groups are marginalized and denied access to opportunity, half of such groups are women. An innovative element of this was the Soliya Terana project of bringing voices, through videos, from diverse countries who opined on the issue considered by the session.
5. In the New Media session panelists discussed how the Internet is allowing people to connect and mobilize in innovative ways, and access and provide news through alternative channels. This is particularly relevant to regions where traditional media face challenges. At the same time, one must recognize that there are limits to new media, such as the digital divide. Additionally, there are consequences for people who are sharing information that is perceived as sensitive for governments.
6. Three main points were raised in the Living Together in Urban Societies session. First, although panelists agreed that diversity in cities leads to growth and development, they highlighted the challenges in addressing poverty and inequality in urban contexts. Second, the role of multi-level governance, and in particular municipalities, was underscored as critical in enhancing the diversity advantage of multi-cultural urban societies and the role of local governments. Third, speakers addressed the importance of learning about practical, concrete and feasible projects, such as new technologies and education for a better understanding of cultural diversity.
7. In the Shaping Perceptions, Challenging Stereotypes session, multiple examples such as the coverage of issues related to Iran and Gaza demonstrated the differences that shape perception. These include language, access to media, and agendas of different players. Although speakers felt that we are closer than ever before in terms of an interconnected world, media coverage does not necessarily reflect this fact. One of the key questions to be explored further is: how do we diversify voices that we hear from within the context of different media markets?
8. The History as an Integral Dimension of Intercultural Dialogue session speakers pointed out that history teaching should emphasize interactions – both positive and negative – to enable understanding of the complexity of history. It was felt that a major challenge was to transform the enormous amounts of available material into forms that could be educational in the classroom and the larger public. Although the use of new technology could help tremendously in this regard, there was a need for training, tracking, and judicious selection. The Alliance of Civilizations was encouraged to work with international partners to develop concrete projects in this regard in the Mediterranean and other regions of the world, as in the case of Southeastern Europe. A youth representative pointed out that since youth were important agents of change in promoting inclusive history, youth should be encouraged to develop inclusive history projects worldwide.
9. In the Public-Private partnership session,(with 4 Heads of Foundations and 4 representatives of corporate sector), a consensus emerged that intercultural dialogue and cultural diversity are a full component of the sustainable development agenda, or at least should be recognized as such. Indeed, sustainable development cannot be restricted to economic and social goals (MDGs) and climate change. This strong message reinforced the need to mainstream intercultural dialogue and cultural diversity in the sustainability agenda. An outcome of the meeting was that a group of partners are willing to generate a set of rough indicators and measures to assess progress made by countries in the field of intercultural dialogue and cultural diversity.
